Tennyson's New "Locksley Hall."

Tennyson's new book of poems—"Locksley Hall Sixty Years After"—contains the three-act play, "The Promise of May," produced in London some years ago. The greatest interest in the volume centres in "Locksley Hall," in which the poet reviews the life of mankind during the past sixty years, and comes to the conclusion that its boasted progress is of doubtful credit to the world in general, and to England in particular. A cynical vein of denunciation of democratic opinions and aspirations runs throughout the poem in marked contrast with the spirit of the "Locksley Hall" of the poet's youth. Among the most striking lines are the following:

Hope the best, but hold the present, fatal daughter of the past;

Shape your heart to front the hour, but dream not that the hour will last;

Aye, if dynamite and revolver leave you courage to die, play your part;

When was man so crumpled with menace, madness, written, spoken lies?

Envy wears the mask of love, and, laughing, sows fact to scorn,

Cries to weakest as to strongest, "Ye are equals, equal-born!" Oh, yes, if yonder hill be level with the flat,

Charm us, orator, till the lion look no larger than the cat,

Thine cat, though that mirage of over-heated language, A. D. DuVal, desire, and catch the Larger than the lion Demos, and in working its own doom,

Tumble nature heel over head and yelling with the yelling street,

Set the feet above the brain and swear the brain is in the feet;

Bring the old dark ages back, without the faith, without the hope,

Beneath the State, the church, the throne, and roll their ruins down the slope.

Author, atheist, essayist, novelist, rhyme, stier, play your part;

Paint the mortal shame of nature with the living hues of art;

Feed the budding rose of boyhood with the drainage of your sewer;

Scum drain into the fountain, let the stream should issue pure;

Set the maiden famies wallowing in the trough of Zolaism;

Forward, forward, aye, and backward, downward, too, into the abyss.

Finally the poet asks:

Shall we find a changeless May after madness—after madness, Jacobinism and Jaquero?

Some divine force to guide through the days I shall not see?

Sense and Humbug.

The Hartford Courant very sensibly discourses on some shams in the newspaper and publishing business when it says that "some people like humbug, and are glad to buy it and pay for it, and treat it as they do any other commodity. 'Illustrated Journalism,' as well as other phases of the same trade, shows this interesting fact suggestively. Any newspaper man who reads many of the journals of the day knows what an utter humbug this pictorial business is. Certain agencies bring out pictures of people or places that happen to be for the moment conspicuous. The same person looks entirely different at the different agencies. It depends on where you buy to determine what you will get. The dead King of Bavaria at one source of supply may be the young Brazilian prince at another. At this office, where a number of illustrated dailies come in by exchange, we gave at one period a little time to the collection of these new expressions of journalistic progress. Two lines of inquiry and investigation were pursued with about equal success. One was to follow the same face and see how many different names it was called as it traveled over the country, and the other was to take the same name and see how many different faces were attributed to it. Each line was long drawn out, and an interesting study. The same female would figure as a murderer's victim, as a noble woman who had slain a villain, as the belle of the mountains or seashore, as Mrs. Cleveland, and as a foreign princess. The same man may be a hero, a villain, an actor, musician, editor, politician, or court witness. People seem to like it. Somebody, praising this new development of enterprise, is quoted as saying that so long as you only take one paper you don't know that the pictures are not correct and so long as you don't know you're all right. There is something in a philosophy that finds comfort in not knowing things. A wide expanse of bliss lies open before a mind in that frame. The same sentiment was expressed also as regards news. If you don't know it isn't true you can enjoy it. Some day the great public will get sick of being thought a fool, and will show its good sense."

WHY INGERSOLL OPPOSES CHRISTIANITY.

At a meeting of Baptist pastors in New York yesterday Rev. Dr. Morse, of Brooklyn, said that he had it on good authority that Bob Ingersoll did not believe a word he himself said against Christianity. Some years ago, said Dr. Morse, Ingersoll got into financial difficulty, and knowing that the income from his business would not tide him over his trouble, he hit upon the plan of lecturing against Christianity as the thing most likely to pay. He had made money, the speaker continued, and had thus saved himself and his family from disgrace.
